The Irish Times.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1918.

It is reported from London that Mr. Duke will soon cease to be Chief Secretary for Ireland. He will be remembered here as an honourable and industrious man, who, as soon as he realised his duty, did not hesitate to fulfil it. Unfortunately, Mr. Duke, who became Chief Secretary in August, 1916, did not realise his duty until the end of February, 1918. For a year and a half he assumed his chief duty to be the creation of a political "atmosphere."

During the last fortnight he has discovered that the first duty of the head of the Irish Executive is the maintenance of law. The debate on the Marquis of Salisbury's motion in the House of Lords yesterday was timely for two reasons. It will be deducte the British public concerning affairs in Ireland, and it will be very useful reading for Mr. Duke's successor, whether he be Mr. Macpherson or another. For many months we have warned the Irish Executive that its attempts to create an "atmosphers" for the Convention by "keeping law and order out of sight" (the words are Lord Salisbury's) were a gross disservice to both Ireland and the truth of our warning only when most of the mischief had been done. The law has fallen into coptempt, and the Convention. Mr. Duke recognised the truth of our warning only when most of the mischief had been done. The law has fallen into coptempt, and the Convention is holding its most critical discussions in a pernicious atmosphere of discreter, confident in the followed of Mr. Duke recognised the fallen into coptempt, and the Convention. There is no substitute

THESE are times when something more than usual as needed—something that will strengthen and restore.

Hall's Wine meats the need. "For many years," a patient writes, "I have proved the value of Hall's Wine—and know of neithing that I can choose as a substitute."

That there is nothing to equal Hall's Wine is proved by the conviscing letters received daily. For instance, a doctor may: "Hall's Wine has prevented many a serious breakdown. I know of nothing better."
